Description:

From Library Journal When Kurt Miller, ex-hippie sheriff of Aspen, Colorado, finds a body in the Roaring Fork River, he plunges into a complex case involving Argentinian terrorists, local politics, his own marital problems, and doubts about his suitability for the job. Resigning, but continuing to investigate, he is forced to confront his past, including his Vietnam vet brother's mysterious suicide. Zigal develops male and female characters well, including a Hunter Thompson-type who would be at home in a James Crumley tale. The author keeps an intricate plot going, knows his Colorado scene, and creates a main character readers will want to meet again. This is an unusually fine first mystery and should win many fans who will rejoice to learn that Zigal is working on a second Muller story. Highly recommended.

From Kurt Muller, the hippie sheriff of Pitkin County, Colorado, has grown into the job over the years. He warily watches the growth of Aspen, the county seat and his hometown. He misses his brother, a suicide, and his ex-wife, who mysteriously abandoned Kurt and their son, Lennon, to live on an Oregon ashram. He maintains his easygoing demeanor, not hassling potheads or illegals, but keeping the big-time drug operators off his turf. He obsesses over unsolved cases and still rues the day Ted Bundy escaped from his custody. When an Argentine diplomat is murdered at a local seminar on world peace, and the arrest of several suspects turns into a bloodbath, FBI agent Neal Staggs, Muller's nemesis, sees an opening to force the unconventional sheriff out of office and, with any luck, straight into prison. Zigal has written an outstanding first novel: he introduces a textured, fully developed detective, places him in a rich environment ripe with fictional possibilities, and surrounds him with a terrific supporting cast. Highly recommended. George Needham --This text refers to the edition.
